

Why Should You Participate?

Why not?

If you live or work in Somerville, you are an important part of the community. Whether you've lived here your whole life, moved here from another country, or come here to continue your education, your experience in Somerville is uniquely your own.

You have a story to tell.

This is a chance for neighbors to speak to one another, for long-time residents to share ideas with new immigrants, and for teenagers to speak with adults — and be heard. It is an opportunity to get to know one another and a way to strengthen our community.

Join us:

*Because you care about your city!
Because you are Somerville.*

The Somerville Conversations Project 2007

Young Somerville: Challenges and Changes

March 2007

Talk! Listen! Understand!

What is the Conversations Project?

Started in 1996, the Somerville Conversations Project is a series of community roundtable discussions. Residents come together in four facilitated discussions to share experiences and communicate about their hopes and concerns.

Project Mission:

- To promote dialogue between groups that have little contact with one another
- To create relationships between diverse people and build a respectful community
- To encourage residents to learn from the experiences of their neighbors
- To promote leadership and civic participation in our city

How does it work?

Approximately two hundred residents will participate in groups of six to eight people. Each group will reflect the diverse population of Somerville — long-time residents, new and old immigrants, people of all ages and backgrounds. Each group will be led by two trained facilitators and will meet for four two-hour sessions during March 2007. Dialogue will center around the changing face of Somerville, and the roles of youth and young families in our community.

Men and women, teenagers and adults — everyone will come out for Somerville's 2007 Conversations Project!

Young Somerville: Challenges & Changes

Young Somerville: Challenges & Changes

For the seventh Conversations Project, Somerville turns towards the younger members of our community and looks to the future of our city.

With its rich colonial history and strong base of residents with multigenerational roots, Somerville is in some senses an old city — but growing younger by the day. Youth and young adults between the ages of fifteen and thirty-four make up 46% of the city's residents.¹ But even as young professionals flock to Davis Square businesses, many teenagers in our public schools face shortages in youth programming resources and continuing gang violence. And with over one half of students in our schools speaking English as a second language,² our community's youth presents a unique microcosm of our city's cultural diversity.

How do these groups relate to one another, and how do older residents experience the changing demographics? Has our educational system risen to meet the challenges of immigrant students and racial disparities? How do we as a community support our youth and our young families?

Join us for a Conversations Project where youth and adults tell their stories and learn from each other about the challenges and changes facing our city.
